(selected from 6824 results) A: .NET is a general-purpose programming language. It is actually used for many, if not most, of the similar languages. C# is a "subset" of .NET, but the same can be said about SQL, C++, and C. You are correct to say that your tag should only be on .NET-related questions. From what I can tell, there is no reason to have it here. The tag is only listed on one question, and there is no discussion, so, no, there is no need to clean that up at this time.

The perception of lesions in the corneal epithelium after laser in situ keratomileusis and photorefractive keratectomy. Laser in situ keratomileusis (LASIK) and photorefractive keratectomy (PRK) are two commonly performed refractive surgical procedures that can result in corneal haze and reduce the visual quality. We sought to study the texture changes of corneal epithelium after LASIK and PRK. Twenty-nine LASIK and 10 PRK patients were enrolled in this study. Each patient had LASIK or PRK alone without ocular surgery. At 12 months postoperatively, the corneal epithelium was observed and evaluated using an impression cytology (IC) method. The rate of IC cell trauma was higher in the LASIK group compared with the PRK group ($P = 0.01$). In the LASIK group, the cells of the apical layer, wing cells, and basal layer all showed that the corneal epithelium was damaged, and the apical epithelial defect was severe. We noticed that some IC cell morphology changes were not found in all patients. We observed that haze of LASIK and PRK were correlated with IC cell morphology changes. The IC cell morphology of corneal epithelium in the LASIK group showed that more cell trauma occurred and the corneal epithelium was more damaged compared with the PRK group. A number of pathogens and disease states require the presence of a "host cell" in order to cause infection or disease. The new draft of the human papilloma virus (HPV) classification system describes an HPV16-related variant, termed HPV-73. This virus has been shown to

"I was once told that it is similar to Yin in a way, but I don't remember." Ruan said he adopted it in his early 20s while studying economics at the University of Illinois. His name change could go some way to solving the problem which had frustrated him - that it was difficult for people of his nationality to get jobs in the United States. Some employers have reported they are struggling to recruit talented people who speak Chinese as well as English because they don't provide specialised language training. "You need to have cultural knowledge, you need to be able to speak the language... you can't be totally dependent on a translator," Ruan said. Critics of the programme say it encourages foreigners to drop their own names in favour of Chinese ones to attempt a more "Americanised" lifestyle, with the result that job seeking is hindered. Others say names, even ones that are made up, become permanently engraved on a person's identity card and there could be implications for security or other issues. Ruan said giving up his own name could be seen as "unusual" in the West, where his parents and grandparents were born and raised. "I thought it would be strange to change my identity," he said.(Reuters) - A Tennessee police detective charged in the death of a drug addict who died in a police holding cell could have faced a misdemeanor charge in federal court for falsely reporting a death, but investigators did not prove that case to prosecutors or pursue the matter, the U.S. Attorney's Office said on Wednesday. The U.S. Department of Justice said in a statement on Wednesday it decided not to pursue charges in the case because it did not find sufficient evidence to prove that Detective Michael Seale had “materially” lied in reporting that the drug addict, Anthony Lamar Smith, had died on June 9, 2013, in a holding cell in the East Tennessee city of Chattanooga. Mr. Seale told investigators that Mr. Smith died of “cardiac arrest”❖
